

Brown's Iron Bitters.

TIRE OUT!

As this medicine is so widely known and so highly recommended, it is not necessary to say more of it. It is a powerful tonic and a perfect blood purifier. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the blood, and it is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the stomach and bowels. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the liver and gall bladder. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the kidneys and bladder. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the lungs and throat. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the skin and hair. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the nerves and brain. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the system. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the body. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the soul.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS

THE BEST TONIC

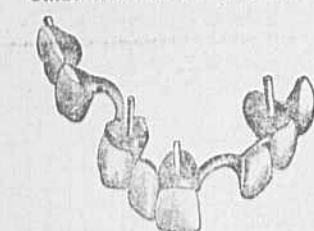

For Weakness, Indigestion, Lack of Energy, etc. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the blood, and it is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the stomach and bowels. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the liver and gall bladder. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the kidneys and bladder. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the lungs and throat. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the skin and hair. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the nerves and brain. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the system. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the body. It is the only medicine that will cure all the diseases of the soul.

Dr. J. C. Brown, Proprietor, Wheeling, W. Va.

Bentley.

Bridge Work.

COMBINATION TOOTH CROWNS.

A System of Inserting Artificial Teeth Without Plates.

DR. S. B. McCORMICK & BRO.,
1050 Main St.

Geo. M. Snook &amp; Co.

STOCK OF

WRAPS,

Fancy Dress Goods,

Velvets and Plushes,

Is larger and handsomer than ever this season.

GEO. M. SNOOK &amp; CO.

1110 Main St.

Dentist.

CHAS. E. MASON.

DENTIST.

1305 Market Street.

OFFICE HOURS:

9 a.m. to 1 p.m., 2 to 6 p.m.

The Intelligencer.

Office: Nos. 25 and 27 Fourteenth Street.

New Advertisements.

Commissioners' Sale.

Wanted—A Cook.

Wanted—Female Help.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

A card—J. W. Hall.

THE DAYS OF OLD.

(Continued from First Page.)

erved it. Not only were soldiers (and their wives and families) were looked after. In fact, anybody that was hungry could be satisfied for the asking. The bill of fare consisted of baked beans, cold meats, pickles, bread and hard tack, pie and cheese, doughnuts, cakes and other good things, and Joseph Spidel & Co.'s Ohio Valley coffee. Spidel gave the coffee and the food; there were eleven barrels on tap to commence with, but almost as much more had to be made to supply the demand.

There was enough of everything for everybody and plenty left after all had been served. The dinner pleased the men immensely and the liberality displayed in the donating of such generous supplies was very gratifying.

In the afternoon the ladies rested from their work by singing a number of war songs that drew the people in large numbers and the dining hall was soon packed with a chorus that could be heard for squares when some old favorite like "Marching through Georgia" was started.

THE BIG MASS MEETING.

A Series of Eloquent Speeches and Patriotic Songs.

About 10 o'clock Capt. J. N. Rose, commanding the squad in charge of Gen. Lyon Post's gun, from East Liverpool, fired a salute and soon after the speaking began from a stand erected on the track in front of the grand stand. The grand stand was filled to overflowing, and the men stood on the track to the number of several thousands.

Comrade Melvin Richards led the singing, the accompaniment being played by Comrade Scheib. The exercises opened with the singing of "America," in which nearly every one of the vast crowd joined.

Capt. Dwyer then introduced Commander Carlin, who offered a fervent and appropriate prayer.

Major J. W. Grubb was presented by General Duval, and in a very few words which were sensible and to the point, extended the freedom of the city and bade all a hearty welcome back to old Camp Carlisle.

Dr. H. H. Logan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, then spoke in a forward and on behalf of that body said:

DR. H. H. LOGAN'S ADDRESS.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.—It affords me very great pleasure, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of Wheeling, to second the remarks of His Honor the Mayor, and extend to you a cordial and heartfelt welcome.

And to these words of welcome we feel prompted to add our hearty congratulations over the fact that so many of you have been spared to meet together in this presence of reason and to recount in the presence of your wives, children and friends the thrilling incidents of your eventful soldier life.

We further congratulate you that you have been spared to witness with your own eyes the wonderful and splendid results which have been achieved for our beloved country, by the labors and sacrifices rendered by yourselves and comrades.

We congratulate you that you have exchanged the weapons of war for the tools of peace; and that the one glorious flag of our country is honored, not only by the allegiance, but by the sincere devotion of both the blue and the grey.

In conclusion, permit me to emphasize, if possible, our words of welcome; to extend our cordial greetings; and to wish you long life in which to enjoy the blessings you have earned for yourselves and your children, and to receive the honors with which a grateful country is glad to crown you.

Major T. H. McKee responded to these two welcomes in a speech of considerable length but which was full of interest.

It was listened to very attentively, and frequently the applause was such that the speaker was obliged to stop and pause. His address abounded in political passages, was well delivered and was one of the most appropriate speeches of the reunion.

Major McKee is a speaker of no mean ability.

At the conclusion of Major McKee's eloquent speech the crowd sang heartily, "Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom," the old song which has been so often sung by our countrymen.

Captain Dwyer then said he was about to call on a man whose name was familiar to every old soldier of three states and to every person within sound of his voice. Mr. A. W. Campbell, former captain of the Wheeling Infantry, was called on.

Mr. Campbell's name was received with cheers.

MR. CAMPBELL'S REMARKS.

Mr. Campbell was called out from the crowd in the rear of the speakers' stand, and escorted to the front by Gen. Duval, and after being presented by Capt. Dwyer to the audience, proceeded to remark that he was on this occasion, what in military parlance, would be called a conscript and not a volunteer. He had therefore no special speech to make. The occasion was a speech of itself. It spoke to us of the momentous days of the past—the stirring days of 1861, when this island where we are now gathered was a camp where were sworn in the first soldiers from this immediate border who had answered the call of the President of the United States for volunteers to save the national capital and beat back the wave of secession and rebellion that was threatening to sweep over us.

The historian of the future will have a subject worthy of his pen when he comes to write of those days on this border. He will dwell on that phase of the early conflict that in the opinion of the speaker reflected the highest glory on the loyal people of West Virginia. West Virginia had not voted for Abraham Lincoln in the Presidential election of 1860. The rebellion party in her borders was a mere handful. The people as a whole were opposed to that party. All their partisan prejudices were against its ascendancy in the government. But they did not mislead the nation in the name of the Union. No appeals to their prejudices could disguise the fact from their patriotic instincts that the issue had ceased to be of a partisan character when the South, which they were nominally a part, had taken up arms to overthrow that government of their fathers. It was then that they ceased to think of themselves as partisans and gave to the world an exhibition of high and devoted loyalty that has never been surpassed in our history.

The might have been the ultimate result of the great conflict had the people of this island thought their weight and influence into the opposing scale and made of this island another West Virginia. That was the navigation of this river and hinder and delay the operations of the government by land and water? Who can say what difference it might have made had the 33,000 loyal troops of West Virginia been enlisted on the other side? That was a time when it did not need a great deal to turn the scale. It is not too much to say that the troops saved the Union. They represented the sentiment of the whole border state that was best and best the rebellion, and enabled the government to get a foothold in the enemy's country.

We never can sufficiently honor this man who was the only one who was in the border in the dark days of 1861, and it is indeed well that we have these reunions of the heroic men who answered their country's call in those days. These reunions are a duty to the young who have never seen the old days. They learn the story of the war in an impressive way. They see their fathers and grandfathers gathered here, carrying these flags and wearing the insignia of their service, and they hear from familiar lips personal references to the events that have now become a part of history. When I look upon these veterans and remember that year by year these ranks must grow thinner, I think of the welcome that was given by Daniel Webster to the veterans who fifty years after the battle of Bunker Hill gathered on the scene to witness the laying of the cornerstone of his new historic monument. "Venerable men," said Webster, "you have come down to us from another generation." Your deeds made it possible for us to assemble here to-day under the flag of our country and commemorate your sacrifices. So I say to these border veterans who are gathered here on this island to-day, it was your loyalty, your heroism, your devotion to the Union that has saved this country, and made it the emblem of an undivided country. We owe it all to you, and therefore we extend to you to-day our heartfelt greetings.

A LETTER FROM GEN. KELLEY.

After the singing of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," and the announcement of the meeting here next year of the Society of the Army of West Virginia, by Captain Carlin, Captain Dwyer read a letter from General Kelley, presenting the veterans of the war, and expressing his regret, but urging all the boys to meet him in Wheeling next year. The latter evoked applause.

Prof. Crago read a poem, "The Last Reunion," in that masterly manner of which he is master. It aroused enthusiasm.

COLONEL CALDWELL.

Colonel George B. Caldwell was then introduced by Captain Dwyer as "one of the biggest soldiers in the army." Colonel Caldwell was greeted with enthusiastic applause and cheers. He made a model reunion speech—short, being over with enthusiasm, full of personal reminiscence, not without a peroration which was the most eloquent thing heard from the stand during the afternoon. It was generally voted the best speech made, and this verdict is just.

Hon. Lorenzo Sanford, of St. Clairsville, a captain in the Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was then presented, and made an eloquent speech, urging upon the old soldiers their duty to do all in their power to secure pensions for comrades who were entitled to them. These sentiments were heartily endorsed. His eulogy of Lincoln was grand, and aroused the crowd wonderfully.

Dr. H. H. Logan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, then spoke in a forward and on behalf of that body said:

DR. H. H. LOGAN'S ADDRESS.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.—It affords me very great pleasure, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of Wheeling, to second the remarks of His Honor the Mayor, and extend to you a cordial and heartfelt welcome.

And to these words of welcome we feel prompted to add our hearty congratulations over the fact that so many of you have been spared to meet together in this presence of reason and to recount in the presence of your wives, children and friends the thrilling incidents of your eventful soldier life.

We further congratulate you that you have been spared to witness with your own eyes the wonderful and splendid results which have been achieved for our beloved country, by the labors and sacrifices rendered by yourselves and comrades.

We congratulate you that you have exchanged the weapons of war for the tools of peace; and that the one glorious flag of our country is honored, not only by the allegiance, but by the sincere devotion of both the blue and the grey.

In conclusion, permit me to emphasize, if possible, our words of welcome; to extend our cordial greetings; and to wish you long life in which to enjoy the blessings you have earned for yourselves and your children, and to receive the honors with which a grateful country is glad to crown you.

Major T. H. McKee responded to these two welcomes in a speech of considerable length but which was full of interest.

It was listened to very attentively, and frequently the applause was such that the speaker was obliged to stop and pause. His address abounded in political passages, was well delivered and was one of the most appropriate speeches of the reunion.

Major McKee is a speaker of no mean ability.

At the conclusion of Major McKee's eloquent speech the crowd sang heartily, "Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom," the old song which has been so often sung by our countrymen.

Captain Dwyer then said he was about to call on a man whose name was familiar to every old soldier of three states and to every person within sound of his voice. Mr. A. W. Campbell, former captain of the Wheeling Infantry, was called on.

Mr. Campbell's name was received with cheers.

MR. CAMPBELL'S REMARKS.

Mr. Campbell was called out from the crowd in the rear of the speakers' stand, and escorted to the front by Gen. Duval, and after being presented by Capt. Dwyer to the audience, proceeded to remark that he was on this occasion, what in military parlance, would be called a conscript and not a volunteer. He had therefore no special speech to make. The occasion was a speech of itself. It spoke to us of the momentous days of the past—the stirring days of 1861, when this island where we are now gathered was a camp where were sworn in the first soldiers from this immediate border who had answered the call of the President of the United States for volunteers to save the national capital and beat back the wave of secession and rebellion that was threatening to sweep over us.

The historian of the future will have a subject worthy of his pen when he comes to write of those days on this border. He will dwell on that phase of the early conflict that in the opinion of the speaker reflected the highest glory on the loyal people of West Virginia. West Virginia had not voted for Abraham Lincoln in the Presidential election of 1860. The rebellion party in her borders was a mere handful. The people as a whole were opposed to that party. All their partisan prejudices were against its ascendancy in the government. But they did not mislead the nation in the name of the Union. No appeals to their prejudices could disguise the fact from their patriotic instincts that the issue had ceased to be of a partisan character when the South, which they were nominally a part, had taken up arms to overthrow that government of their fathers. It was then that they ceased to think of themselves as partisans and gave to the world an exhibition of high and devoted loyalty that has never been surpassed in our history.

The might have been the ultimate result of the great conflict had the people of this island thought their weight and influence into the opposing scale and made of this island another West Virginia. That was the navigation of this river and hinder and delay the operations of the government by land and water? Who can say what difference it might have made had the 33,000 loyal troops of West Virginia been enlisted on the other side? That was a time when it did not need a great deal to turn the scale. It is not too much to say that the troops saved the Union. They represented the sentiment of the whole border state that was best and best the rebellion, and enabled the government to get a foothold in the enemy's country.

We never can sufficiently honor this man who was the only one who was in the border in the dark days of 1861, and it is indeed well that we have these reunions of the heroic men who answered their country's call in those days. These reunions are a duty to the young who have never seen the old days. They learn the story of the war in an impressive way. They see their fathers and grandfathers gathered here, carrying these flags and wearing the insignia of their service, and they hear from familiar lips personal references to the events that have now become a part of history. When I look upon these veterans and remember that year by year these ranks must grow thinner, I think of the welcome that was given by Daniel Webster to the veterans who fifty years after the battle of Bunker Hill gathered on the scene to witness the laying of the cornerstone of his new historic monument. "Venerable men," said Webster, "you have come down to us from another generation." Your deeds made it possible for us to assemble here to-day under the flag of our country and commemorate your sacrifices. So I say to these border veterans who are gathered here on this island to-day, it was your loyalty, your heroism, your devotion to the Union that has saved this country, and made it the emblem of an undivided country. We owe it all to you, and therefore we extend to you to-day our heartfelt greetings.

A LETTER FROM GEN. KELLEY.

After the singing of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," and the announcement of the meeting here next year of the Society of the Army of West Virginia, by Captain Carlin, Captain Dwyer read a letter from General Kelley, presenting the veterans of the war, and expressing his regret, but urging all the boys to meet him in Wheeling next year. The latter evoked applause.

Prof. Crago read a poem, "The Last Reunion," in that masterly manner of which he is master. It aroused enthusiasm.

COLONEL CALDWELL.

Colonel George B. Caldwell was then introduced by Captain Dwyer as "one of the biggest soldiers in the army." Colonel Caldwell was greeted with enthusiastic applause and cheers. He made a model reunion speech—short, being over with enthusiasm, full of personal reminiscence, not without a peroration which was the most eloquent thing heard from the stand during the afternoon. It was generally voted the best speech made, and this verdict is just.

Hon. Lorenzo Sanford, of St. Clairsville, a captain in the Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was then presented, and made an eloquent speech, urging upon the old soldiers their duty to do all in their power to secure pensions for comrades who were entitled to them. These sentiments were heartily endorsed. His eulogy of Lincoln was grand, and aroused the crowd wonderfully.

Dr. H. H. Logan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, then spoke in a forward and on behalf of that body said:

DR. H. H. LOGAN'S ADDRESS.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.—It affords me very great pleasure, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of Wheeling, to second the remarks of His Honor the Mayor, and extend to you a cordial and heartfelt welcome.

these flags and wearing the insignia of their service, and they hear from familiar lips personal references to the events that have now become a part of history. When I look upon these veterans and remember that year by year these ranks must grow thinner, I think of the welcome that was given by Daniel Webster to the veterans who fifty years after the battle of Bunker Hill gathered on the scene to witness the laying of the cornerstone of his new historic monument. "Venerable men," said Webster, "you have come down to us from another generation." Your deeds made it possible for us to assemble here to-day under the flag of our country and commemorate your sacrifices. So I say to these border veterans who are gathered here on this island to-day, it was your loyalty, your heroism, your devotion to the Union that has saved this country, and made it the emblem of an undivided country. We owe it all to you, and therefore we extend to you to-day our heartfelt greetings.

A LETTER FROM GEN. KELLEY.

After the singing of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," and the announcement of the meeting here next year of the Society of the Army of West Virginia, by Captain Carlin, Captain Dwyer read a letter from General Kelley, presenting the veterans of the war, and expressing his regret, but urging all the boys to meet him in Wheeling next year. The latter evoked applause.

Prof. Crago read a poem, "The Last Reunion," in that masterly manner of which he is master. It aroused enthusiasm.

COLONEL CALDWELL.

Colonel George B. Caldwell was then introduced by Captain Dwyer as "one of the biggest soldiers in the army." Colonel Caldwell was greeted with enthusiastic applause and cheers. He made a model reunion speech—short, being over with enthusiasm, full of personal reminiscence, not without a peroration which was the most eloquent thing heard from the stand during the afternoon. It was generally voted the best speech made, and this verdict is just.

Hon. Lorenzo Sanford, of St. Clairsville, a captain in the Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was then presented, and made an eloquent speech, urging upon the old soldiers their duty to do all in their power to secure pensions for comrades who were entitled to them. These sentiments were heartily endorsed. His eulogy of Lincoln was grand, and aroused the crowd wonderfully.

Dr. H. H. Logan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, then spoke in a forward and on behalf of that body said:

DR. H. H. LOGAN'S ADDRESS.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.—It affords me very great pleasure, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of Wheeling, to second the remarks of His Honor the Mayor, and extend to you a cordial and heartfelt welcome.

And to these words of welcome we feel prompted to add our hearty congratulations over the fact that so many of you have been spared to meet together in this presence of reason and to recount in the presence of your wives, children and friends the thrilling incidents of your eventful soldier life.

We further congratulate you that you have been spared to witness with your own eyes the wonderful and splendid results which have been achieved for our beloved country, by the labors and sacrifices rendered by yourselves and comrades.

We congratulate you that you have exchanged the weapons of war for the tools of peace; and that the one glorious flag of our country is honored, not only by the allegiance, but by the sincere devotion of both the blue and the grey.

In conclusion, permit me to emphasize, if possible, our words of welcome; to extend our cordial greetings; and to wish you long life in which to enjoy the blessings you have earned for yourselves and your children, and to receive the honors with which a grateful country is glad to crown you.

Major T. H. McKee responded to these two welcomes in a speech of considerable length but which was full of interest.

It was listened to very attentively, and frequently the applause was such that the speaker was obliged to stop and pause. His address abounded in political passages, was well delivered and was one of the most appropriate speeches of the reunion.

Major McKee is a speaker of no mean ability.

At the conclusion of Major McKee's eloquent speech the crowd sang heartily, "Shouting the Battle Cry of Freedom," the old song which has been so often sung by our countrymen.

Captain Dwyer then said he was about to call on a man whose name was familiar to every old soldier of three states and to every person within sound of his voice. Mr. A. W. Campbell, former captain of the Wheeling Infantry, was called on.

Mr. Campbell's name was received with cheers.

MR. CAMPBELL'S REMARKS.

Mr. Campbell was called out from the crowd in the rear of the speakers' stand, and escorted to the front by Gen. Duval, and after being presented by Capt. Dwyer to the audience, proceeded to remark that he was on this occasion, what in military parlance, would be called a conscript and not a volunteer. He had therefore no special speech to make. The occasion was a speech of itself. It spoke to us of the momentous days of the past—the stirring days of 1861, when this island where we are now gathered was a camp where were sworn in the first soldiers from this immediate border who had answered the call of the President of the United States for volunteers to save the national capital and beat back the wave of secession and rebellion that was threatening to sweep over us.

The historian of the future will have a subject worthy of his pen when he comes to write of those days on this border. He will dwell on that phase of the early conflict that in the opinion of the speaker reflected the highest glory on the loyal people of West Virginia. West Virginia had not voted for Abraham Lincoln in the Presidential election of 1860. The rebellion party in her borders was a mere handful. The people as a whole were opposed to that party. All their partisan prejudices were against its ascendancy in the government. But they did not mislead the nation in the name of the Union. No appeals to their prejudices could disguise the fact from their patriotic instincts that the issue had ceased to be of a partisan character when the South, which they were nominally a part, had taken up arms to overthrow that government of their fathers. It was then that they ceased to think of themselves as partisans and gave to the world an exhibition of high and devoted loyalty that has never been surpassed in our history.

The might have been the ultimate result of the great conflict had the people of this island thought their weight and influence into the opposing scale and made of this island another West Virginia. That was the navigation of this river and hinder and delay the operations of the government by land and water? Who can say what difference it might have made had the 33,000 loyal troops of West Virginia been enlisted on the other side? That was a time when it did not need a great deal to turn the scale. It is not too much to say that the troops saved the Union. They represented the sentiment of the whole border state that was best and best the rebellion, and enabled the government to get a foothold in the enemy's country.

We never can sufficiently honor this man who was the only one who was in the border in the dark days of 1861, and it is indeed well that we have these reunions of the heroic men who answered their country's call in those days. These reunions are a duty to the young who have never seen the old days. They learn the story of the war in an impressive way. They see their fathers and grandfathers gathered here, carrying these flags and wearing the insignia of their service, and they hear from familiar lips personal references to the events that have now become a part of history. When I look upon these veterans and remember that year by year these ranks must grow thinner, I think of the welcome that was given by Daniel Webster to the veterans who fifty years after the battle of Bunker Hill gathered on the scene to witness the laying of the cornerstone of his new historic monument. "Venerable men," said Webster, "you have come down to us from another generation." Your deeds made it possible for us to assemble here to-day under the flag of our country and commemorate your sacrifices. So I say to these border veterans who are gathered here on this island to-day, it was your loyalty, your heroism, your devotion to the Union that has saved this country, and made it the emblem of an undivided country. We owe it all to you, and therefore we extend to you to-day our heartfelt greetings.

A LETTER FROM GEN. KELLEY.

After the singing of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," and the announcement of the meeting here next year of the Society of the Army of West Virginia, by Captain Carlin, Captain Dwyer read a letter from General Kelley, presenting the veterans of the war, and expressing his regret, but urging all the boys to meet him in Wheeling next year. The latter evoked applause.

Prof. Crago read a poem, "The Last Reunion," in that masterly manner of which he is master. It aroused enthusiasm.

COLONEL CALDWELL.

Colonel George B. Caldwell was then introduced by Captain Dwyer as "one of the biggest soldiers in the army." Colonel Caldwell was greeted with enthusiastic applause and cheers. He made a model reunion speech—short, being over with enthusiasm, full of personal reminiscence, not without a peroration which was the most eloquent thing heard from the stand during the afternoon. It was generally voted the best speech made, and this verdict is just.

Hon. Lorenzo Sanford, of St. Clairsville, a captain in the Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was then presented, and made an eloquent speech, urging upon the old soldiers their duty to do all in their power to secure pensions for comrades who were entitled to them. These sentiments were heartily endorsed. His eulogy of Lincoln was grand, and aroused the crowd wonderfully.

Dr. H. H. Logan, president of the Chamber of Commerce, then spoke in a forward and on behalf of that body said:

DR. H. H. LOGAN'S ADDRESS.

VETERAN SOLDIERS.—It affords me very great pleasure, in behalf of the Chamber of Commerce